

Philippe C. Schmitter is the 2009 recipient of the Johan Skytte Prize, the 'Nobel in Political Science', 'for his path-breaking work on the role of corporatism in modern democracies, and for his stimulating and innovative analysis of democratization'. He was Professor of Political Science at the European University Institute in Florence, Department of Political and Social Sciences until September 2004. He was then nominated Professorial Fellow and later also Professor Emeritus at the same institution. Previously he was Professor in the Politics Department of the University of Chicago (1967–1984), at the European University Institute (1982–1986) and at Stanford (1986–1996). He has published books and articles on comparative politics, on regional integration in Western Europe and Latin America, on the transition from authoritarian rule in Southern Europe and Latin America, and on the intermediation of class, sectoral and professional interests. His current work is on the political characteristics of the emerging Euro-polity, on the consolidation of democracy in Southern and Eastern countries, and on the possibility of post-liberal democracy in Western Europe and North America.
